

Christine Marshall trained at the St Bartholomew School of Nursing and Midwifery, City University, London from 1998 – 2002 where she achieved a Higher Diploma in Nursing Studies in Adult Nursing.

Her first National Health Service appointment as a Dermatology nurse was with the Dermatology Department at St Andrews Hospital (Newham University Hospital NHS Trust), in London, in 2002. There she trained in Phlebotomy, Patch Testing, Leg Ulcer Treatment and worked as a surgical theatre assistant for day surgery.

In 2004 she began work as an Occupational Health Advisor for Bexley Council where her role involved pre-employment screening, management of sickness and absence, administration and management of the vaccination programme for employees of the council.

Due to the growing importance, in modern practice, of working within the correct guidance framework, a personal interest in family dynamics, and wishing to ensure adoption of best practice in interaction with patients, their families, and children in need, she embarked on a full-time programme of legal practice at a professional level between 2007 and 2009 (ILEX Level 3-mixed assessment route and Family law and Family practice).

Since 2008 she has become involved in medical private practice, initially as a medical typist, then taking on more responsibility as a medical secretary, covering all aspects of the profession, from handling patients' correspondence and administration, to dealing with confidential issues and is in the process of taking on a more hands-on patient liaison role, advising patients and their families on treatment and conditions.
